The Cubicle: Your Home Away From Home?

Is your cubicle your home away from home? For many, everything that they need is there. Of course, you have your phone, your computer and your paperwork. But, you probably have all sorts of other things as well. Photos are throughout the walls. Your hot drink and your cold drinks are there. You will find that many people have their doodle pads within reach as well. But, really, the cubicle is a sad place.You can brighten them up a little. One excellent way to improve employee satisfaction is to provide them with a comfortable place to work, even if that is only a cubicle. But, make them convenient, comfortable and spacious. Sure, you dont have a lot of room but that little extra bit is likely to help your employees feel more in an office than a box. You can add shelving units, desks and computers to the space, but again, make sure that things are easy to use and within reach. You should allow them to have a place to put notes and pictures of those at home. You can easily do this with a corkboard of sorts or even by using padded cubicles.Why should you bother? Of course you are thinking that this is a waste of money. But, for many businesses, having a comfortable place to work in will allow your employees to work better. Efficiency is quite important in all aspects of business. And, this is no hidden secret that happy Daigle residential roofing employees provide better, more efficient workloads.
