Matresses are very important aspect of a healthy lifestyle. Today there are many kinds of mattresses available in the market, each designed specifically for your need and requirement. Good quality mattresses usually last for a long time, provided that you follow certain guidelines.Choosing the Right MattressesThe kind of mattress you need depends on your body and sleeping habits. You would need a firm mattress if you sleep on your stomach. Those who sleep on their sides will need a soft mattress because it causes less stress on their pressure points. Ask the salesman about the basic differences between each mattress. Before you purchase any mattress try it for atleast ten minutes by lying down in different postures.Types of MattressesThere are several types of mattresses available in the market, of which the spring matresses are the most popular. They have upholstery layers that separate the body from the steel coils to give you greater comfort. Pillow top mattresses come in a wide variety of firmness levels. Foam mattresses are made up of either layers of foam that are laminated together, or have a solid core of foam to give you more comfort and support. Air mattresses form a very small fragment of the mattress business. They are basically used for temporary purposes, like camping. Water mattresses are the rarely used because they are hard to adjust and most of the homes are not designed to take the weight in one place. Futon mattresses are great space savers, as you can use them as a couch or a mattress to sleep on. The adjustable mattresses work wonders for people having back problems. These are electrical mattresses that change position with a hand control.Maintenace of Your MattressesTo ensure long life of your mattress you need to follow certain guidelines.
