

Choosing a Personal Injury Lawyer in Los Angeles: Interviews, Fees, and Eisenberg Law Group PC

Choosing a personal injury lawyer in Los Angeles takes comparison, not guesswork. The California State Bar recommends treating the search like shopping: find two or more candidates and contact them for brief interviews. Here is how to run that process and where Eisenberg Law Group PC fits into it.

Compare Lawyers Before You Commit

The State Bar's guide, "Before Selecting an Attorney" (calbar.ca.gov), advises planning time for comparison shopping and interviewing multiple candidates. It also warns against any lawyer who guarantees results, noting most lawsuits are not "sure things" and that a lawyer should instead explain the strengths and weaknesses of your case.

Questions to Ask in the First Meeting

Bring a short agenda so each interview is comparable:

- Has the lawyer handled cases similar to mine?
- Will this lawyer handle my case personally, or will another firm member?
- How long is the case expected to take, and what steps are involved?
- What are the fees and billing arrangements?
- What are the weak points in my claim?

Fees and Written Agreements in California

California adds a paperwork safeguard. As explained in the Advocate Magazine article "Handling retainers, referral fees and managing client trust accounts", retainer agreements in personal injury or wrongful death matters must comply with Business and Professions Code section 6147, which requires contingency-fee agreements to be in writing and a signed copy to be given to the client. Ask for the agreement in writing and read it before signing.

Risks to Avoid

The opposite of a careful search is a rushed one. Promised outcomes, unclear fee terms, and no explanation of your case's weaknesses are reasons to keep looking. The State Bar also notes that certified Lawyer Referral Services can connect you with attorneys in good standing who carry professional liability insurance, and that referred lawyers offer an initial consultation for a reduced fee or no fee.

Eisenberg Law Group PC

Eisenberg Law Group PC is a Los Angeles law group to include in that comparison. If you are weighing personal injury lawyers, contact the firm to ask the questions above, request a written fee agreement, and confirm who will handle your matter. A conversation lets you judge responsiveness and clarity directly.

Prepare Before You Call

The State Bar suggests writing down key points in your case, gathering names and telephone numbers of everyone connected with it, and bringing all related papers; some lawyers may review documents before a meeting. Do this first, and every interview becomes more productive.

Additional Questions About Choosing a Los Angeles Injury Lawyer

If a lawyer discusses weaknesses but still guarantees a result, is the guarantee still a warning sign?

Yes. The State Bar says to be wary of any lawyer who guarantees results because most lawsuits and other legal work are not “sure things.” A lawyer should instead point out the strengths and weaknesses of your case. A discussion of weaknesses is expected, but it does not cancel a guarantee. Treat the guarantee as a warning sign and ask the lawyer to explain the case’s risks, expected steps, and timing without promising an outcome.

Does the State Bar require the first-meeting explanation of fees and billing to be in writing?

The supplied State Bar guidance does not say the first-meeting explanation of fees and billing must be written. It says to find out about fees and billing and to ask for a simpler explanation if you do not understand something. California’s separate contingency-fee rule for personal-injury and wrongful-death matters requires a written agreement and a copy of the signed contract for the client. So ask for the fee agreement in writing and read it before signing.

If a lawyer explains the expected timeline but not fees and billing, what should I ask next?

Ask directly about fees and billing, including how the lawyer charges and what you should expect. The State Bar’s first-meeting checklist treats expected length, steps, and fees and billing as separate items, so a timeline answer does not cover the fee question. If the explanation is unclear, ask for a simpler explanation. For a California personal-injury or wrongful-death contingency matter, also ask for the written fee agreement and a copy of the signed contract.

Does the State Bar set a time limit for the brief comparison interviews?

The guidance does not specify a time limit. It recommends contacting two or more candidates for brief interviews and preparing before the first meeting. Treat “brief” as focused rather than rushed: jot down key case points, bring contact details for people connected with the case and all related papers, medical accident recovery and ask about similar cases, who will handle the matter, expected length, steps, fees and billing, and the case’s strengths and weaknesses. If an answer is unclear, ask for a simpler explanation.

Does the Advocate Magazine summary explain how referral fees or client trust accounts must be handled?

The supplied summary does not explain referral-fee or client-trust-account rules. It addresses California retainer agreements in personal-injury and wrongful-death matters under Business and Professions Code section 6147.

According to the summary, contingency-fee retainer agreements must be in writing, and the client must receive a copy of the signed contract. For guidance on referral fees or trust-account management, the supplied passage does not provide enough detail to answer.
