This quiz is accurate at one thing: tallying how many of 100 listed experiences you have had. Answer honestly and the number is exact.

Where it falls short is measure character. It has no questions on values, kindness or maturity, and it treats every item as one point, no matter how big or small.

It also lacks context. It has no way to tell a choice from something that happened to you.

Treat it for what it is: a light-hearted icebreaker. Ignore anyone who rice purity uses a score to judge people.